Tennessee State Library Collection. Engraving, the Historical Society: Assessing the Impact of Jacksonian Democracy on the Political and Social Segments of American Society from 1824 to 1860. Introduction: The period in U.S. history commonly referred to as the Jackson democracy era proved to be a period of change in part through increased voter participation. It also proved to be at a time when the federal government found itself at the forefront of implementing change regardless of how it affected different areas of our country. Many believe it helped get us down the road of the sections and eventually into the Civil War. Sample Guiding Questions and Sources Document 1: Andrew Jackson, March 4, 1829, Draft Inaugural Address Some of the topics that will deal with my earliest attention as intimately close to the prosperity of our beloved country, are, the elimination of the national debt, the introduction and safeguarding of the most stringent economy in government reductions, judicial tariffs, combined with the cultivation of trade and agriculture, and regulated by the principles before the ad, justified respect for state rights and safeguarding state sovereignty as the best test of the tendencies for unification; and the distribution of excess income between the countries according to the distribution of representation, for educational purposes and internal improvement, except where the issues are entirely national. With the achievement of these objects I trust the commemoration of our national blessings can be doubled, and the scenes of domestic work being more sooty and happy. Quote: Jackson, A. (1829, March 24). Inaugural address. At December 19, 1828, on December 19, 1828, an exhibition and protest, was reported by the House Special Committee. The Senate and the South Carolina House of Representatives, now meeting and sitting in the General Assembly, via the Wm. The Honorable Smith and Honorary Robert Y. Hein, their representatives in the United States Senate, are doing on behalf of and on behalf of the good people of the aforementioned Commonwealth. A solemn protest against the system to protect debts recently adopted by the federal government for the following reasons: 1. Because the good people of this Commonwealth believe that the powers of Congress have been assigned to it, trusting the achievement of certain specified objects that restrict and control them, for any other purpose, is a violation of the Constitution. 2. Because the power to impose tariffs on imports is and in nature can only be a means of influencing objects specified by the Constitution; Because there is no free government and less no government of taxi powers, there can be a right to impose a sea tax, more than a fine that is not simultaneously justified by the public need for a quote: (Calhoun, J.C. 1782-1850 (1959). Document 3: Andrew Jackson to Louis Cass, December 17, 1832, from correspondence by Andrew Jackson, to Secretary Cass. Washington, December 17, 1832. Sir, if I can judge from the signs of the times repeal, and dissolution, or in the language of truth, disengagement, gaining strength, we must be prepared to act quickly, and smash the monster in her crib before she matures into adulthood. And from New York, we can send to Charleston Bay with steamships, that number of soldiers. Can we please order, in four days. We want three divisions of artillery, each made up of nine, 12 and 18 pounds, one east, one west, the other the central brigades. Some of these calibers are ready for field service. Some guns with their full equipment ready for service. A few swords and pistols and some fixed amount of ammunition for dragons, brass parts for the field, some, and what caliber. As soon as possible, I wish a report from the Command Department, on this subject, which determines exactly, how many pieces of caliber artillery, are ready for the field, some good guns etc., and in what place in the deposit. Quote: Cass, L. and Jackson, A. (1836). Andrew Jackson to Lewis Cass, January 23, 1836.
